

Urban Stomach by blast studio

Live performance and exhibition during the London Design Festival:
your waste transformed into furniture and architecture thanks to robots and living organisms

There is no waste in nature, the trash of an organism is the resource of another one. Inspired by these natural ecosystems, Blast Studio created a cycle where urban waste is transformed thanks to fungi and new technology into unique living structures.

During the London Design Festival, Blast Studio will showcase its process through a live 3d printing performance in their pop-up café. All the waste produced by the café and its customers will be recycled on site and transformed into artifacts by the Blast 3d-printer during the 3 days of opening. The performance will be coupled with an exhibition showing unique artworks and furniture 3d printed from urban waste and taken over by mycelium, the roots of fungi.

Come and experience a new vision for cities where technology and nature fall in love and waste becomes a valuable local resource at 37-39 North Acton Road NW106PF from September 24th to 26th. To know more check out www.blast-studio.com
