

Shall We Talk: Art is no longer narrated.

18 young artists explore the boundaries of media, expression, and techniques

London, September 2025 — this group exhibition “Shall We Talk” will debut during the London Design Festival, showcasing multimedia works by 18 emerging artists and designers. The exhibition responds to contemporary issues of communication, identity, and perception.

Curated by Y.Square Official, a new platform dedicated to supporting young creatives, the show marks the platform’s first public initiative. Y.Square aims to break down artistic barriers and promote interdisciplinary practices through collaborative opportunities.

The exhibition’s theme — “Shall We Talk — Art is no longer narrated.” highlights a shift from storytelling to dialogue in artistic expression. The featured works span image, sound, body, and material, each inviting viewer participation and engagement.

The participating artists, coming from such as textile, visual arts, jewellery design, and communication design, bring together material sensitivity and interdisciplinary approaches to explore the tension between art and contemporary society.

“We want to create a real connection — not just another display window.”
