London Design Festival 2026

What if the spaces that remain with us most deeply are not the ones we arrive at, but the ones we pass through slowly? The verandah holding the weight of evening light, the corridor where a conversation lingers, the threshold where one is neither leaving nor arriving.

"In-Between Thresholds" begins with the understanding that some of the most meaningful experiences emerge within moments of transition. Not within fixed destinations, but within spaces that resist definition, existing somewhere between stillness and movement, memory and immediacy, presence and absence. Across many lived experiences, particularly within the rhythms of everyday life in India, thresholds were never empty pauses. Courtyards, shaded edges, verandahs, and in-between spaces carried conversation, silence, waiting, observation, and ritual within them. They allowed time to stretch softly. This exhibition approaches the threshold not as a boundary to cross, but as a condition of becoming. The works gathered here remain within ambiguity, allowing meaning to unfold slowly rather than resolve itself. They invite a slower way of seeing, attentive to what quietly emerges in moments suspended between one state and another.

OSA Studio

OSA Studio is a multidisciplinary architecture and interior design practice based in New Delhi, working at the intersection of structure, materiality, and spatial experience. Founded and led by architect Daksh Goel, the studio approaches design as an act of precise composition, where proportion, light, and detail shape environments that are both functional and emotionally resonant. Rooted in contextual sensitivity and material honesty, its work spans architecture, interiors, and curated spatial installations, with a growing presence in international design discourse, including exhibitions at Somerset House and collaborations with the London Design Festival.
